Partnerships have always been important to the arts and to state government. Here at the Washington State Arts Commission (WSAC), the past year was a time of significant growth in the depth and breadth of our partnerships. What thrills me most are new harmonies arising from fresh collaborations and long-time alliances – and some unusual connections.

Recreation and culture are now identified as a Priority of Government for Washington state. As a result of a new working partnership – and a recently signed Memorandum of Understanding with Washington State Parks and Recreation Commission – we've put artwork at the Lewis and Clark Interpretive Center at Cape Disappointment State Park near Ilwaco, with plans underway to bring other arts programs to state parks. In addition, we are part of a three-state partnership with the National Parks Service to support art projects along trails.

Working with Inland Northwest Technology Education Center (INTEC) in Spokane and the Mayor's Office of Arts and Cultural Affairs in Seattle, we co-hosted two forums with Richard Florida, author of The Rise of the Creative Class to explore the growing role of creativity in the local and state economy.

Artists, arts administrators and service providers met together to discuss careers in the arts for people with disabilities last fall, the theme of three WSAC-hosted forums presented through a partnership with the National Arts and Disability Center at UCLA, the National Endowment for the Arts, and VSA Arts.

A new research initiative will identify arts education practices that best contribute to student achievement and long-term change, thanks to generous funding by Washington Mutual - and continuing the work of the multi-dimensional Arts Implementation Task Force of educators, arts leaders, and funders.

Our grant dollars continue to support hundreds of opportunities for the arts to intersect in our communities in unexpected ways. Working with the Wallace Foundation, we also provide funding and leadership development for a dozen organizations specifically to enhance and assess arts participation in disabled, rural and economically disadvantaged communities. In these pages, you'll find data to document the fruits of our work – plus some inspiring stories.

For more than 40 years, the work of this agency has been “the conservation and development of the state's artistic resources” through strong, vibrant connections with artists, arts organizations and communities. Now more than ever, we are making some surprising connections: with parks and industry, careers and education, libraries and schools. Through these creative connections and many more, we can leverage greater impacts as we relate the arts to state and local priorities.

Thanks for being our partner in this work – and contributing in your own way to the harmony that makes Washington a great place for the arts.

*A wonderful harmony arises from joining together the seemingly

public participation

Enhance opportunities for Washington's residents and visitors to participate in the arts.

"I learned about songs in my culture and how to play the guitar."
student participant, Yakima Valley Mariachi Project

The arts bring people together and provide a nexus for individual and collective expression.

The Allied Arts of Yakima County— through perseverance and ingenuity— found a way to span ages, cultures, languages and perceptions in the Yakima Valley as part of WSAC's Arts Participation Initiative.

Thirty six percent of the county's population is Hispanic and a rich tradition of Mariachi music exists in homes and with small groups of musicians, many who have been trained in Mexico. Even so, many Hispanic youth in the area were not engaged in the music of their culture.

Allied Arts' goal was to bring Mariachi music into mainstream band programs in the Yakima, Toppenish and Grandview school districts and also to allow community members of all races and ages to learn and perform the music. The organization started by convincing local mariachi musicians, music teachers, community members and businesses to be involved in the project. While not an easy task, Allied Arts was able to secure instruments and instructors, find practice and performance facilities, and, most importantly, involve the Hispanic community and school districts in the project. Three Summer Mariachi camps were conducted in area towns, which culminated in a concert in Franklin Park featuring 50 new and seasoned musicians of all ages. More than 200 people attended the event, which also gathered 270 pounds of food for Northwest Harvest.

Music teachers were amazed at how fast the students learned and how dedicated they were to their instruments – the guitar, the violin and the trumpet. As a result of the project, one school district has added mariachi music for credit, students have a common interest that spans cultural differences, and community support for the project has been cemented.

Arts Participation Initiative

The Wallace Arts Participation Initiative is a five-year WSAC program in which 12 model organizations from around the state are convening, studying and working on techniques to involve their grassroots target communities in arts and culture projects. The program focus includes ethnic, rural, low income and disabled populations.

This initiative is part of the national START Program of multi-year grant projects funded by the Wallace Foundation (New York) involving 13 states in arts participation programs through their state arts agencies. Funds from the National Endowment for the Arts also were added to the program.

arts education

Support the arts as basic education and provide opportunities for lifelong learning.

Increase cross-cultural understanding and preserve the diverse traditional arts in our state.

“The common focus of the arts has encouraged collaboration in many areas of providing quality education to our students.”

Lois Baker, curriculum director, Yelm Community Schools

Communities value the arts for Washington’s students in and outside of the classroom.

WSAC has funded an innovative program for the last five years that encourages partnerships at the local level – educators, parents, arts organizations, businesses and others – that strengthen arts education for K-12 students.

The Yelm Community Schools Consortium has a five-year plan called ACT—Artists in the classroom, Community-based visual art, and Teacher training. Each focus area overlaps with the others and brings in additional community involvement with each successful event. The goals for the program are to bring quality arts programs to students and to build a network of support for arts education.

In addition to scheduling artists in residence in the district’s schools, the consortium partners with Tacoma Art Museum, who hosts “Yelm Day” at the museum and conducts art activities at the Yelm Timberland Library. Parents often work beside their children during these activities. Yelm students work with local artists to create public art pieces, like the intriguing double-sided fireplace surround created by students and ceramicist Barb Kates for the library.

Teachers are simultaneously trained in the state’s learning requirements in the arts and gain skills to teach the arts across subject areas.

K-12 Arts in Education Programs

WSAC's Arts in Education Program strengthens the arts as part of Washington students' education from kindergarten through high school graduation by offering grants and services that build the capacity of schools and communities to provide quality arts instruction based on the state's arts standards.

Artist in Residence Grants support the contributions of individual artists to education by funding artist residencies in public schools and other settings in Washington State.

Curriculum Grants help schools implement the state's Essential Academic Learning Requirements in the Arts.

Community Consortium Grants help communities build strong, sustainable arts education programming by funding supporting local resources and developing local arts education expertise.

“Salish weaving is an essential aboriginal skill that breathes vitality and pride into our women.”

subiyay (Gerald Bruce Miller), Traditional Leader and Artist, Skokomish Nation

Preserving and sharing cultural traditions enriches lives for current and future generations.

Susan Pavel is Native Hawaiian who has come to deeply respect and value her husband's Twana culture and tradition, and she is now a master Salish weaver passing the art onto other generations. Susan and her apprentice, sister-in-law Dalena Pavel, were awarded a 2003 WSAC Folk Arts Master and Apprentice grant.

Susan Pavel first studied Puget Salish weaving for six years under master Salish weaver and Skokomish Nation member, subiyay Bruce Miller. Her dedication to the art form gave her a head start on mastery; Bruce claimed her first blanket for his own, an honor typically bestowed only after many years of teaching.

Susan has claimed her own Mastery, and is now teaching her own Apprentices. Dalena Pavel, who has also studied under Bruce Miller, has studied carding, spinning, and weaving. Susan also taught her twill and twine techniques, utilizing traditional patterns that she learned from Miller.

Susan's work has been seen in the Squaxin Island Tribal Museum, Library and Research Center during their SQ3Tsya'yay (Weaver's Spirit Power) exhibit, as well as at the Stonington's Gallery and Snow Goose Gallery in Seattle, where her weavings were the only Puget Salish work displayed.

Both Master and Apprentice are dedicated to the preservation of the Puget Salish culture, and by teaching and learning weaving they are accomplishing just that. Someday Dalena hopes to be able to teach her own children the art, passing it on for the future.

Professional Development Assistance Program

WSAC's Community Arts Development program works to build the capacity of artists and organizations to be resources for their communities. One element of this program is a number of small matching travel grants that allow the recipient to develop their professionalism through attendance at workshops, conferences or other learning opportunities.

healthy communities

Support the growth, development and stability of arts organizations in local communities.

Support professional artists who, in turn, benefit their communities and our state's economy.

Promote cultural tourism.

“Investing in artists and cultural organizations is an investment in our quality of life and our future.”
Edie Adams, Chair, Artist Trust Board of Trustees

Michael Bisio, composer, and recipient of 2003 Artist Trust/Washington State Arts Commission Fellowship. Photo by Mike Kleimo.

Artists are at the heart of our state's thriving cultural environment and local economies.

For 26 years, WSAC has awarded artist fellowship grants as part of its mission to provide individual artists with opportunities and funding for projects that provide public benefit. Since 1978, the agency has funded more than $850,000 in grants to individual artists and, for the last 11 years, has partnered in that effort with Artist Trust, a statewide not-for-profit organizations for artists. Artist Trust administers WSAC's fellowships in conjunction with their own similar program.

In fiscal year 2003, WSAC contracted with Artist Trust to provide $36,000 for six artist fellowships of $6,000 each and $17,000 for the organization's Grants for Artist Projects (GAP).

An additional $10,000 in funding was provided to Artist Trust for delivery of artist services: a quarterly journal, opportunities listings, research and technical assistance on artist issues regarding health care, studio space, and referral services for workshops.

WSAC and Artist Trust collaborate on special projects in addition to grant programs. After the Nisqually Earthquake in February 2001, Artist Trust served as the distribution point for funding to artists whose studio space and work were damaged and/or destroyed in the greater Puget Sound region, with funding provided by the National Endowment for the Arts, as well as the arts commissions of Seattle and King County.

Grants to Organizations

WSAC's Awards Program offers financial support to Washington's nonprofit arts organizations through operating and project grants. This funding helps to reduce the cost of producing or presenting artistic events for the general public, making them more accessible to our state residents.

The Project Support Program supports small arts organizations and community service groups, who may apply for matching grants for specific public arts events.

Mid-sized arts organizations are served through the Operational Support Program.

In the Institutional Support Program category, the state's largest professional arts organizations receive operating grants based on a peer panel review of each organization's artistic quality and administrative credentials.

WSAC initiates partnerships for services delivered statewide through its Cooperative Partnership grants.

The arts are uniquely qualified to help people and communities grieve, heal and honor.

Denshō: The Japanese American Legacy Project, of Seattle, melded the arts with technology to creatively meet their mission "to pass on to the next generation," or to leave a legacy, which is the definition of the Japanese word denshō. The organization received a Project Support Grant from WSAC in fiscal year 2003 towards the development of a multimedia website and an artist honorarium.

One Japanese American family's memories of living behind barbed wire during World War II are captured in the bilingual website In the Shadow of My Country: A Japanese American Artist Remembers. The acclaimed Washington state artist Roger Shimomura, who was held at Minidoka, Idaho, as a three year old, found inspiration in the journals of his grandmother Toku Shimomura and painted a series An American Diary, which traveled to major museums around the country. The virtual exhibition, In the Shadow of My Country displays the 30 paintings tempered by the grandmother's patient, hopeful words.

In addition to many features on the website, a teacher resource guide for grades 5-12 accompany the exhibit. Both the website and teacher guide are offered in Japanese and English.

Businesses value creative individuals for a productive workforce and creative communities to attract and retain employees.

Last September, WSAC teamed up with Spokane's premier innovation and technology group, INTEC, to host best-selling author Richard Florida to the city. INTEC recognized the importance of Florida's coined "creative class" to the future economic success of Spokane and invited the author to speak as part of "Rise," a street festival that took place on the city's newly refurbished Post Street. The event included live music and art exhibits, and drew many key business leaders and elected officials. Area business leaders believe that increasing awareness of the creative class and working to develop a supportive environment will help position Spokane as a successful region.

Two days later, Florida led a series of forums in Seattle to germinate discussion in that city around the benefits of cultivating the creative class and expanded cultural assets.

As the traditional economic engines continue to be redefined, Florida's theories about the importance of a vibrant cultural scene in communities and workplaces become increasingly relevant. The arts can help employers and others attract the creative class and help Washington continue to prosper.

"Enhancing our region's innovation economy will be an essential part of diversifying and improving local economic conditions."

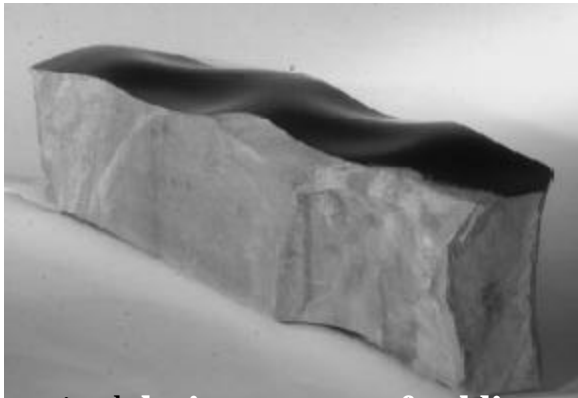

Lewis Rumpler, CEO, INTEC, Spokane

state art collection

Provide quality art for Washington's students and citizens in publicly accessible places throughout the state.

Support professional artists with commissioned projects.

Conserve artwork in the collection for future generations.

"I recognized the importance of public art for blind and visually impaired communities, as many art galleries and museums have no-touch policies."

Alice Taylor, WSAC Art in Public Places Program

Art in public places is a catalyst for discussion, reflection and celebration for the community in which it is conceived and located.

When WSAC's Art In Public Places staff first met with the School for the Blind in Vancouver, Washington, about their percent-for-art allocation for the new Ogden Resource Center, superintendent Dean Stenehjem wanted to help educate others about making art accessible to visually impaired and blind audiences. WSAC was challenged to work outside of its normal slide-viewing process for selecting artwork.

The school established a representative committee to review artwork for their students, visitors, faculty and staff. The committee included sighted, visually impaired and blind members representing students, faculty, administrators, community members, maintenance staff and architects.

Sighted committee members reviewed slide portfolios of artists in the Artists Resource Bank, the roster of artists eligible to be considered for percent-for-art allocations. They narrowed the list to four artists with bas-relief and 3D sculptural elements to their work. On Valentine's Day, 2003, the committee visited the four artists' studios. Blind and visually impaired committee members explored the artworks with their hands and all committee members discussed the work with the respective artist. The tactile experience brought smiles to participants faces. The committee selected works by two Seattle artists: a polished basalt bench by John Hoge (photo at left) and a bas-relief ceramic work by Steve Gardner (see inside back cover for photo).

The process helped to illustrate that the benefits of art extend to every person and that art should be accessible for all to enjoy.
